Sensus communis is neither intellectio communis nor communis opinio, it is neither 'ordinary good sense' nor 'common belief', it is no 'gemeine Menschenverstand', no 'common human understanding'. Common belief is despised by Kant because it is guided by obscure principles.

Sensus communis clarification of a Kantian concept

Sensus communis 3 in the face of the sensus which rounds it off, and that's what cannot be forestalled. It has to be said clearly: the sensus doesn't give rise to an experiencing, in the Kantian sense. The aesthetics of the beautiful isn't the aesthetics of truth. Taste teaches nothing about the object, it has no object, no referent.
